Multilateral refers to multiple countries working together on international relations issues. Examples of multilateral organisations include the UN, the EU and the World Bank.

Some of these organisations (including the UN) look to recruit from unrepresented countries which means that British and American applicants can be excluded. Dual nationality may be helpful. The majority of internships are unpaid and organisations generally can be specific about your level and stage of study as well as age. The UN in particular is very clear that doing an internship with them does not necessarily lead to a more permanent role at the UN but any experience would be seen positively by other organisations in the sector.

See below for examples and links to multilateral organisations that have established formal internship and graduate entry schemes. These have varying criteria including age, nationality, languages, experience and stage of study so it’s important to research then in depth to make sure you are eligible to apply.

NOTE: Britain’s decision to leave the EU will likely mean fewer opportunities within the institutions for UK citizens, we will update this information when we find out more.

EU

The European institutions employ around 50,000 staff, about 10% of the size of the British Civil Service. Approximately 80% of these are based in Brussels or Luxembourg, and many others are based in EU offices in member states and delegations in non-EU countries.

For an outline of EU career opportunities and the selection processes see:

European Civil Service
http://ec.europa.eu/civil_service/job/index_en.htm

European Personnel Selection Office

Candidates for all vacancies must be competent in at least two EU languages (A-level equivalent or above) although English and French are the two main working languages of the institutions. See for full details of language requirements.

Traineeships

The best way for recent graduates to get experience in an EU institution is through a traineeship (still often referred to by the French term, stage). Trainees (or stagiaires) are recruited twice annually for paid or unpaid work experience placements of 5 months. Institutions recruit separately for these Deadlines are in March and September for a start date 6 months later. Undergraduate applicants must have their degree. Final-year students cannot apply.

If you are a current postgraduate student, you can apply before you have completed the second degree as you already have your undergraduate degree

Paid traineeships offer €1000 a month plus travel reimbursement. There may also be informal traineeships with the representation offices.

The principal institutions offering Traineeships are:

The European Commission

The Council of Europe

The European Parliament

The European Court of Justice
An outline of the recruitment process for recent graduates

There are three “Big Recruitments or Competitions” held each year:

Spring: Administrators including policy work, law and economics

Summer: Translators and interpreters

Winter: Support roles, mostly non-graduate, including finance, secretarial, communication

Final-year students in any subject who are EU citizens are eligible to apply for these competitions. The recruitment process takes 7-9 months.

All candidates who apply for the graduate programmes take a computer-based battery of numerical, verbal and abstract/diagrammatic reasoning tests. These are taken at any one of the EUs 40-odd test centres; candidates can choose the most convenient and don’t have to take them in their home country.

This stage of selection also involves a “situational judgement” test, which is taken in your second language. The tests are followed by an assessment centre which includes:

- A case study on the field in question which is a two-hour policy exercise using a large quantity of information. The test is of skills not knowledge and all the material provided is fictional
- An oral presentation: 20 minutes preparation, a 10-15 minute presentation with questions to follow. Previous knowledge is not assumed
- A structured interview about you. You are expected to give competency examples
- A group exercise involving discussion, negotiation and reaching a compromise. This is also taken in the candidate’s second language
- Practical language tests

Most of the assessment centres are held in Brussels but the oral presentation and structured interview elements may be held in other countries for large-scale recruitments.

At the end of this process, successful candidates are put on a reserve list database. This is valid for at least one year and may be extended. The selection process aims to balance numbers recruited with anticipated vacancies, so most candidates should be placed within the year.

Information and advice for British applicants

Britain’s decision to leave the EU will likely mean fewer opportunities within the institutions for UK citizens, we will update this information when we find out more.

British citizens make up 12% of the EU’s population, but only 5% of the employees in EU institutions, which previously gave good opportunities for UK candidates who met the skills and second language requirements for these posts.

EU Alternatives
There are many opportunities on the "Euro-fringe" - working in organisations, both public and private sector, who have a presence in Brussels to monitor EU activities and to have an input into the decision-making process. These include NGOs, local government, law firms, lobbying organisations, consultancies, charities, industrial and commercial organisations and many more. The following sites carry details of internships and job vacancies in these organisations.
